

VERMONT WATCHMAN AND STATE JOURNAL.

Watchman & Journal.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1860.

Terms—$200 per year, strictly in advance; or $20 if sent half yearly.

To our Subscribers.

The last meeting of the Editors and Publishers' Association in this State recommended the adoption of the system of prepayment of subscriptions to all the papers of the State. In our judgment this is the best system for the subscriber as well as for the publisher. Action has, however, been delayed by our contemporaries at well as ourselves, until it comes late to put this recommendation in practice in all cases the coming January. We have determined, however, to so far commence practice under the system of payment as to enter the name of our new subscribers on our list after this date, unless the subscription is prepaid; and to discontinue all new subscriptions. When time for which they are paid expire, and we shall be obliged to all our new subscribers to pay them if they will give us positive assurance that the new year will be in advance, and such of them as are induced to do so, in their present subscription, will add us internally if they still settle this, and pay us for the coming year.

LECTURE BY

DR. H. S. L. O. R. D.

The 50th lecture of the regular course will be given at VILLAGE HALL, WEHINNEY BURNING, January 13, 1860, 9a.

Rev. JOHN GOLD, LL. D., of Mansfield, Conn.

Dr. Lewis has his annual expectation for many years, in the larger cities, a popular lecture course, but has had a large success in this country and in England, and are very much adapted for audiences of all classes. The lecture will be delivered in a roomy hall, after which the contents of the tree were distributed, and each boy received something from it. Some of the boys also gave little tokens to their teachers. This done the seats were passed, the audience were seated, and the speaker, who had been quite as interesting and almost as easily as the war itself. A policy having been deliberately settled upon, and adopted in all the states in rebellion save three, it can hardly be expected that Congress will consent to any essential modification of its policy, especially on the demand of one of the exceptional States, much less will it frame a more lenient policy for such a State. But, while Congress will hardly consent to allow universal amnesty as a condition, it would be most unwise to do so. It will be provided that the law be accepted in good faith. The subject of the lecture has not been previously discussed upon at this time.

ATMOSPHERE, ordinary season tickets, 75 cents.

Spanish Affairs.

The situation of the other nations has been turned to Spain with great interest for many months past. The course which events have taken in that country has incensed all who have seen the want of humanity and the want of elegance of style. He is doing well now, and has been examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mother Hubbard, and dawn was breaking and she was sure that she must go; when clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man. He alighted. He rattled the knocker. He rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up stairs he went to Mother Hubbard's room and waited.

Eighty-one stared at him. He took off his hat.

"I'm d—d," said Mrs. Hubbard. "I am going to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint. Yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden."

And Mother Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of husbands.

The children screamed, the cat meowed, the dog barked. The stoutest boy ran for the doctor. People flock to the Hubbards'. The last was examined. Yes, there was Mother Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed bidding good-bye to her family and friends, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that she was at hand, for people were very super